

BillCollectors Studio

A booking web app first. A native app can follow.

The first build

Give artists one place to create an account, choose studio time, pay a deposit, and manage sessions from their phone or computer. Give the owner one place to manage bookings, hours, rates, and client details. Customers open a website link; no app-store download is required.

For artists	For the studio owner
Email signup, login, and account recovery.	View upcoming sessions and client details.
Choose a date, session type, duration, and time.	Set business hours, blocked dates, rates, and deposits.
Add session notes and review the full cost.	Track payment status and remaining balances.
Pay the deposit through the approved processor.	Manage approved photos, music, and studio information.
See confirmations, receipts, and session history.	Connect calendar updates and booking notifications.

What the demo demonstrates

Artist and owner views, a demo account, date and time selection, session notes, pricing, a simulated deposit, session history, and a calendar-event download. Owner edits change sample hours, rates, and blocked dates. Same-session booking overlaps are excluded. Photos and music management are presented as planned features.

What needs to be connected for launch

Secure account login and separate owner permissions; a database that prevents double bookings; payment checkout with verified payment results; booking confirmations; and an approved calendar connection. Payments settle through the studio's own processor account. Card details should stay with that processor. Customer records require restricted access and a clear privacy policy.

Confirm with the owner

The supplied concept shows $60/hour with a 2-hour minimum, $55/hour for a 5-hour block, $50/hour for a 10-hour block, and a $50 deposit. Confirm these rates, session types, hours, contact details, engineer availability, cancellation/refund rules, payment processor, and approved photos/audio before quoting the final build.
